Rising Sun Sets On Diggers Slouch Hats

The Australian Defence
Force has made the controversial decision to remove the Rising Sun hat badge from the downward brim of the Grade 2 Slouch Hat from July 1, deeming it
"disrespectful".

A Defence spokesman said the decision had nothing to do with widespread cuts announced in the Budget.

"The Rising Sun Badge should never be hidden from view or worn pointed to the ground as is the case when worn on the downturned brim of the Grade 2 Slouch Hat, as this may be viewed as disrespectful," the spokesman said.

"This decision was made in respect of army's symbol."

Lieutenant General Morrison told a Senate estimates hearing in Canberra today that it was his decision alone to ban the badge from the Grade 2 hat.

"The Grade 2 Slouch Hat is constructed in a way that its side can never actually be put up," he said. Lt Gen Morrison said there was no interlocking latch on the top of the hat so it could never be worn up showing the Rising Sun badge. It had always been on the underside of the brim.

"It seemed to me to be inappropriate and I made the decision as the chief of army to take the badge off the hat," he said. "It seemed disrespectful to me."

Lt Gen Morrison said most soldiers understood the logic behind his decision. "I know that there have been a few people that have said that they don't agree with it," he said. "It was on my shoulders to make the decision and I did."

The Rising Sun Badge will remain on the upturned brim of the Grade 1 Slouch Hat during ceremonial duties.

Soldiers will be allowed to keep the Rising Sun hat badges they currently own.

The Rising Sun badge was originally known as the General Service Badge but is now officially called the Australian Army Badge.

About the McKinna Foundation

Brigadier J G McKinna CMG, CBE, DSO, LVO, KstJ, ED

Brigadier McKinna kindly consented in his name being used in the Foundation. His long and distinguished association with the Regiment began in 1921 when he joined the Prince Alfred College Cadet Unit then affiliated with the 10th Battalion, The Adelaide Rifles. In 1924 he became a recruit in 10th Battalion, and in the same year was promoted to corporal, then in 1926, to sergeant. Commissioned in 1937, he was promoted to Captain in June 1939 and on the day war broke out he was called up for full time duty as 2IC of the 10th Battalion's Murray Bridge Company. His first wartime task was to organise the defence of the road and rail bridges.

From November 1939 until April 1940 he was Adjutant of the 10th Inf Bn (Militia) He joined the 2/27th Battalion as OC C Coy on May 1 1940. He was transferred to the 2/3rd Australian Pioneer Bn in July 1940, promoted to major in August and served with them in Darwin, Syria, El Alamein and New Guinea. In July 1943 he was transferred back to the 2/27th Bn as Second in Command and served with it in new Guinea until January 1944 when he was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel as Co of the 25th Infantry Battalion.

He commanded this Battalion in New Guinea and Bougainville and was awarded the Distinguished Service Order. In his letter of congratulations, General Sir Thomas Blamey wrote "Your cool and fearless leadership and your complete disregard for personal safety were an inspiration to (your) Officers and men during the recent operations in Bougainville."

On the reformation of the Citizens Military Forces in 1948 he was appointed Commanding Officer of his original unit the 10th Infantry Battalion (Adelaide Rifles). In 1952 he was promoted to Brigadier and commanded 9 Inf Brigade. From 1956 to 1960 he commanded Central Command Staff Training Group. He was Honorary ADC to the Governor General of Australia from 1953 to 1956.

Parallel with his distinguished military service, Brigadier McKinna was a successful engineer and administrator, before being appointed South Australian Commissioner of Police in 1957. Other government and community organisations on which he served included the Road Traffic Board, The Royal Automobile Association, the Royal Life Saving Society and the RSPCA. In every way, Brigadier McKinna's life has epitomised the Regimental motto: - PRO PATRIA.

HOW THE FOUNDATION WILL HELP THE ROYAL SOUTH AUSTRALIA REGIMENT

The Royal South Australia Regiment is the infantry component of the citizen (reserve) forces in South Australia. It is the successor to all the infantry units raised in the State since 1854, including those raised in the state since 1854, including those raised for service overseas in the South African, First and Second World Wars. Its battle honours are those won by the 10th, 27th, 43rd, 48th and 50th Battalions in the First AIF and by the 2/10th, 2/27th, 2/43rd, 2/48th and 27th (SA Scottish) of the Second AIF.

In March 1994, Brigadier J. G. Mckinna, one of the most distinguished and longest serving members of the regiment, graciously consented to his name being given to the Foundation, the objects and purposes of which are to promote the efficiency, morale and esprit de corps of the officers and other ranks of the Regiment. A volunteer regiment does not receive support from Army resources in some areas important for it's well-being. To this extent it has to rely on assistance from the "Regimental Family" and those who wish to become part of the family.

Under a legally registered trust deed, a trust fund has been initiated as the financial branch of the McKinna Foundation. Among the categories to which funds may be provided, and listed in the Trust Deed are:-

- 1. the preservation, upkeep and appropriate display of the Regimental Collection
- 2. the preservation and upkeep of Queen's and Regimental Colours
- 3. Ex gratia financial assistance to the dependents of officers or other ranks killed or incapacitated whilst on duty.
- 4. financial assistance to selected regimental officers and other ranks representing the Regiment on visits and training postings overseas
- 5. The purchase of books for a regimental library
- 6. The purchase of special regimental equipment, accoutrements, prizes and awards for training competitions and sporting equipment.

The trustees may at their discretion allot funds for other Regimental needs.

Australian Military Forces at Federation

The Commonwealth Of Australia came into existence on 1 January 1901 as a result of the Federation of the Australian Colonies. Under the Constitution of Australia, defence responsibility was now vested in the new federal government. The co-ordination of Australia-wide defensive efforts in the face of Imperial German interest in the Pacific Ocean was one of driving forces behind federalism, and the Department of Defence immediately came into being as a result, while the Australian Army and Commonwealth Naval Force were also soon established.

The Australian Army came into being on 1 March 1901 and all of the colonial forces—including those still in South Africa—became part of the new force. 28,923 colonial soldiers, including 1,457 professional soldiers, 18,603 paid militia and 8,863 unpaid volunteers, were subsequently transferred. The individual units continued to be administered under the various colonial Acts until the Defence Act 1903 brought all of the units under one piece of legislation. This Act also prevented the raising of standing infantry units and specified that militia forces could not be used in industrial disputes or serve outside Australia. However, the majority of soldiers remained in militia units, known as the Citizen Military Forces (CMF). Major General Sir Edward Hutton—a former commander of the New South Wales Military Forces—subsequently became the first commander of the Commonwealth Forces on 26 December and set to work devising an integrated structure for the new army. In 1911, following a report by Lord Kitchener the Royal Military College, Duntroon was established, as was a system of universal National Service.

The battle cruiser HMAS Australia

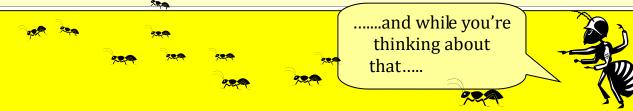

Prior to federation each self-governing colony had operated its own naval force. These navies were small and lacked "blue water" capabilities, forcing the separate colonies to subsidise the cost of a British naval squadron in their waters for decades. The colonies maintained control over their respective navies until 1 March 1901, when the Commonwealth Naval Force was created. This new force also lacked blue water capable ships, and ultimately did not lead to a change in Australian naval policy. In 1909, Prime Minister Alfred Deakin, while attending the Imperial Conference in London, sought the British Government's agreement to end the subsidy system and develop an Australian navy. The Admiralty rejected these approaches, suggesting instead that a small fleet of destroyers and submarines would be sufficient. Deakin was unimpressed and had previously invited the American Great White Fleet to visit Australia in 1908. This visit had fired public enthusiasm for a modern navy and in part led to the order of two 700-ton River class destroyers The surge in German naval construction prompted the Admiralty to change their position however and the Royal Australian Navy was subsequently formed in 1911, absorbing the Commonwealth Naval Force.

On 4 October 1913, the new fleet steamed through Sydney Heads, consisting of the battle cruiser HMAS Australia, three light cruisers, and three destroyers, while several other ships were still under construction. And as a consequence the navy entered the First World War as a formidable force.

The Australian Flying Corps was established as part of the Army in 1912, and was later separated in 1921 to form the Royal Australian Air Force, making it the second oldest air force in the world. Regardless, the service branches were not linked by a single chain of command however, and each reported to their own minister and had separate administrative arrangements and government departments.

Little known facts about well known things

The Esky

First called the 'Inuit', it was initially used to transport donors' organs from fatal accident sites to hospitals and waiting patients. It was not until some St John's Ambulance men participated in a national "Where do you get it?" advertising campaign, that its great potential for transporting beer was understood.

Lamingtons

The Savoy in London claims to have first baked a Lamington as does the Royal Hotel in Auckland, New Zealand. The truth is that the chef at the Harbord Beach Hotel did a memorial gateaux and named it 'Brick cake with chocolate and coconut flakes' but after the sinking of the Titanic, the chef who lost his half-sister in the tragedy, decided to re-name it after her old employer, the baron, whose mountain property on the brick-shaped plateau Lamington so much resembled his creation.

Pavlova

Straight after Russian scientist Ivan Petrovich Pavlov received the Nobel Prize for his work on conditioned reflexes in dogs, he turned his attention to salivation in humans. His team of Stalinist researchers came up with the Pavlova, a cake of heavy meringue. Although Stalin personally took an interest in the rather unethical hush-hush experiments, they were not successful due to the rather unlucky choice of decorations: mash potato with a sprinkling of fish roe. Not until the recipe was smuggled out to Australia by Pavlov's estranged daughter, Anna Ivanovna, was the missing passion fruit element realised and the cake turned to great international success.

Combined Services Mess @ TTD

Dear Adelaide Sub-Branch member,

The Combined Mess at the Torrens Training Depot has been in decline in recent times.

The SA Peacekeepers Sub-Branch of the RSL has volunteered to take over the operation of the Mess. They, like me, believe that it is an excellent facility which is well located and needs to be supported.

The Combined Mess is open on the second and third Fridays of every month between 3.00 pm and 9.00 pm.

You can also use it for functions for a service or like group. It is excellent for this purpose because of its central nature, unique decor and abundant car parking on the Torrens Parade Ground. There are also limited kitchen facilities available.

I encourage all of you to take advantage of this wonderful facility. Bring your friends and work colleagues.

The SA Peacekeepers are also looking for volunteers to assist with occasional bar tender duties. Who will join me on the roster?
